

Guide to Submitting Letters to the Editor

Writing a letter to the editor now is the one of the most effective things you can do to support medical liability reform. Include your personal story, and be sure to mention one or two key points in support of reforms (contact HMA for assistance if needed). Letters should be short (about 200 words) and to the point, including enough background information for readers to understand. If referring to published stories/letters, please note the publication title, article title, and date.

To submit your letter, please include the writer's true name, address, and telephone number. Letters should be typewritten, or if this isn't possible, printed legibly. We suggest submitting to all major papers:
